5. Occupational Therapy in a General Hospital—Miss K. Suter, Therapist in charge of Occupational Therapy at the Royal Victoria Hospital.

6. Occupational Therapy and Children's Work—Mrs. B. Miller, Occupational Therapist in charge of the department at Children's Memorial Hospital.

7. Occupational Therapy in a Sanitarium—Miss M. Caton, Chief Therapist at the Verdun Protestant Hospital.

8. Occupational Therapy in relation to Department of Veterans' Affairs—Miss H. Beatty, Occupational Therapist in charge at Queen Mary Hospital.

EDITORIAL

There is a steady demand for occupational therapy and an increasing number of opportunities for occupational therapists.

This situation tends to provide a false security, a satisfaction with its accomplishments and even more serious an established mode of procedure which ends in a rut. It is easy enough to get into a groove, it is often a costly experience getting out.

Every successful professional person keeps in constant contact with advances in their own and allied fields. This is not only a daily matter but at least once a year it is necessary to secure some professional experience in another school, another city, a different centre.

These periods of study provide for good mental health, social security and better professional standing. It is suggested that occupational therapists everywhere should review their own standing in the profession.